THE BRIND BLOCK

It May be Put on the Continental Hotel Corner.

REALTY TRANSFERS INCREASING

The Clearing House Shows an Increase Over the Same Day of a Year Ago—The Big Sign Nuisance.

"We expect a cablegram in a few days," said Architect Vin Krolow, "which will settle the new Brind block on the Jennings corner where the Continental hotel now stands."

At the time of the completion of the plans it was believed that this fine building would be erected on the Harrison lot, at the north-west corner of the State road and Second South street. Negotiations had gone so far that it was given out that the sale had been made, but there came a hitch in the proceedings that caused the whole matter to fall through. The West Temple syndicate took advantage of the "hitch" and induced the local backers of the Brind block to try and strike a deal with the Jennings estate for the fine corner on which the old Continental hotel now stands. As nearly as could be learned, the price per foot front has been fixed at $800, and a letter containing the terms of the proposed sale was directed to the English parties who are to advance the bulk of the money. The cablegram in response to this letter is expected in a few days, and it will be definitely known whether the deal will go through or not.

The Big Sign Nuisance.

Hang out your sign.

Hang it wherever you can find a place to stick it.

Be sure you hang it in the most conspicuous place, and where, should it fall, it will drop on some man's head, and be sure that it falls on the right head.

It makes no odds where you hang it—but hang it.

In ordering your sign, consult no one's convenience except your own. That's business. If you pay $15 a month rent there is no reason why you should not have a sign ten times as big as the man who pays $50. The smaller the business the bigger should be your sign.

The lettering should always be bold, drawn and impudent, obtruding, brazen with gilt, gorgeous.

These grating thoughts were naturally inspired by the sign decorations on the Commercial block.

The owners of that handsome edifice spent $10,000 or $20,000, or even $30,000 in ornamenting the front elevation of that building. When completed it was really voted a handsome structure.

Look at it now!

All the beautiful architectural lines are taken and the whole front is a garish jumble of signs. It is no longer more inviting to the eye than the Kentucky liquor store, if indeed it is as much so, as the liquor store has more character to its lettered decorations.

If a bill-poster had approached the owners of the Commercial block and tried to buy the front of the new block for a bulletin board, in all probability, would have something like the above lettering falling from him behind. The owners would have been shocked out of countenance at the impudence of the "rascal." But there is a bulletin board in all the town that presents such hot-pot harum-scurum, stud-horse, crazy appearances as the front of the Commercial block!

Can there be any valid reason for defacing the handsome face of this majestic building in any such a vulgar way? Big signs belong to the country, to villages and to the most uncivilized of the uncivilized, not to cities of half a hundred thousand, people with buildings costing a quarter of a million dollars. They may enhance the artistic appearance of a row of buildings, but they do not enhance the artistic appearance of a single building, and where an architect is paid a large percentage on the cost of the building to design beautiful lines, stone masonry and all other architectural effects to cover it all over with signs, big enough to scare a circus out of town. It was bad enough to daub the windows with lettering egregiously large without changing blackboards into the beautiful walls, and some of the V shaped and of the colors of a clown at a circus.

A big sign is an abomination. It is in bad form. The smaller, neater, and more attractive the style of a sign the more it is satisfactory to the man who fathers it. Men unwittingly hang out their photographs in their placards. It is time that this provincial nuisance be stopped. The owners of the new business blocks ought to prevent the desecration of their property.

ANOTHER NUISANCE.

Fencing up the Street to Erect Bulletin Boards.

Another nuisance that ought to be corrected right off is the fencing of the street for the purpose of using it as a bulletin board.

There is no reason why a man who happens to take a notion to put up a building should have to damage the property of others on either side. Some of the new buildings extend their cellars to the curb line and it would seem that if they were allowed to the ground up to the curb line it should be the duty of the city council to put up building material that could be stored to the rear just as well.

Some of the buildings are renting the fenced in space for fruit and pea-nut stands.

Real Estate and Business Notes.

THE ROAD TO RUIN

A Sad Story Told by Pretty Frances Schroeder.

CAUGHT IN A DEN AT OGDEN

Her Occupation that of a Waitress—Her Story of Her Home Life Not Complimentary to Her Parents.

Yesterday, Frances Schroeder, a very pretty girl of sixteen, was before Judge Zane on the application of her mother, Mrs. Hearn, to have her committed to the reform school on the ground of incorrigibility. Mrs. Hearn testified that she had been unable to control the girl at all for two years past. In February last, the witness came up town with her daughter and the latter made an excuse to go to a store and disappeared. Mrs. Hearn did not see her daughter again until a short time ago, when Marshall Young took her out of a house of ill repute.

Marshall Young testified that he instituted a search for the girl at the instance of her mother, and found her in a house of ill fame, kept by Edna Lawrence, in Ogden. The marshal talked with the girl about running away and she stated that she would rather go to the reform school or any where else than stay at home, because her stepfather abused her.

Miss Schroeder was then called and with streaming eyes, she stated that she left home because her stepfather abused her, and because her mother said her to. She was found in a house of ill fame in Ogden, it was true, but she was only "waiting on drinks," for which she received $3 a week. Judge Zane said it was simply shocking that a bright girl of sixteen should leave home and enter a house of ill fame. It was bad enough for a man to enter such a place, but for a young girl to be found there was simply horrible. She had a long life before her and had the opportunity of becoming a useful member of society. It seemed that she preferred to enter upon a life of shame and be a lasting disgrace to herself and family. While he deeply regretted it he thought the best thing that could be done would be to commit her to the reform school, and if she behaved herself there would doubtless let her out in a comparatively short time.

The unfortunate young girl was then led sobbing from the court room followed by her mother.

The case of S. Liddard vs. William Carroll, which was dismissed some time ago for want of prosecution, was re-instated.

In the case of Ellis vs. Porter, a stay of five days was granted.

In the case of S. H. Lewis vs. L. D. Kinney et al., the order requiring the defendant Kinney to appear before the referee for examination as to his property, was set aside.

In the case of Johnson vs. Loveland, in which Judge Zane reduced the judgment in favor of the plaintiff from $500 to $500 on Tuesday, S. H. Lewis, the plaintiff's attorney, agreed to the order.

The important mining case of Edith N. Morris vs. Joseph Chapman et al., involving the title to Wells mine, in Bingham, was then called up, and the plaintiff moved for a continuance on the ground that an important witness was absent in Europe. The defense strenuously opposed any continuance, stating that they had brought witnesses from Montana and elsewhere. Besides this, the defendants were negotiating for the sale of their interests, and this sale would fall through if the trial should be continued and the absent witness offered to admit that the absent witness would testify as claimed. After a long discussion, the motion was continued until this morning.
